1 Introduction

The college experienced a substantial increase in undergraduate enrollment during the 2024–2025 academic year, with growth concentrated in the studio art, theater, and dance majors. Faculty hiring expanded in parallel: three new full-time positions were created across the department to absorb the load. The dean’s office reports that retention rates among first-year students improved by roughly twelve percent over the prior year, suggesting that the cohort cohesion programs introduced in fall 2024 are producing the intended outcome. Several alumni events held during the fiscal year drew larger-than-expected attendance, indicating renewed community engagement. The communications office expects this trend to continue into the coming review cycle, although budget pressures may temper the pace of further expansion.

2 Findings

Survey results indicate that students value small-cohort instruction and direct faculty access above all other program features. A majority of respondents (sixty-eight percent) reported that one-on-one critiques were the most impactful pedagogical element of their experience. The college experienced a meaningful boost in completion rates across the studio majors during the prior cycle, with growth particularly strong among transfer students. Faculty cited the introduction of mid-semester checkpoint reviews as the principal driver of this improvement. The data also shows a notable shift in enrollment composition: first-time freshmen now represent forty-one percent of the studio art population, up from thirty-three percent two years prior. Recommendations: continue investment in the cohort-based advising program, and consider expanding mid-semester checkpoints into the theater and dance majors.

3 Conclusion

The fiscal year closed with the college well-positioned for the next review cycle. Approximately twelve percent year-over-year growth in undergraduate enrollment reflects both the strength of the academic programs and the success of the new outreach initiatives.

Major	2023 enrollment	2024 enrollment
Studio Art	142	168
Theater	88	94
Dance	61	73

Looking forward, the priorities for the coming year include sustaining the mid-semester checkpoint program, formalizing alumni engagement, and identifying additional sources of operating support to underwrite faculty hiring at the current pace. A final budget recommendation will accompany the next report.
